

Children Helping Children was the focus of a group of hardworking young ladies from Southbury this Spring and Summer. Girls from Southbury Girl Scout Troop 64114 worked both individually and as part of a team to bring help and happiness to children in crisis situations. The girls, led by Southbury resident Michelle Doyle since kindergarten, completed the elementary school portion of their scouting careers with a culminating project they can be proud of for years to come. They worked together to determine their theme and then broke that theme into smaller concentrated projects - a book drive for hospitalized children, a craft supply drive for children in crisis housing, and a stuffed animal drive for young ambulance passengers. These projects helped the girls grow as humanitarians and as Girl Scouts. Clark Atkinson, Caroline DePalma, Katie Doyle, Erin Farrell, Jessica Kinsella, Emily Matson, Nicole Nittardi, Morgan Prendergast, Kari Richardson, Rachel Ushka, and Ashley Winfield put in over 20 hours each researching, planning, collecting, and organizing these drives, benefitting countless children in their own and surrounding communities. They have earned the Girl Scout Bronze Award for their efforts.

I am not sure how you wanted to list their names so I have included something identifying so you could put the names however you wanted.

Ashley Winfield (Holding the brown teddy bear), Emily Matson (wearing pink sunglasses), Morgan Prendergast (Holding a pink stuffed animal), Tori Trumpp, SAA volunteer, Kari Richardson (braided hair), Katie Doyle (Holding a white bear), Erin Farrell (holding a pink stuffed animal with a heart), Caroline DePalma (holding a penguin)
